Re a European Numismatic Network

The study of coins is fundamental to research into older periods in European and world history, for historians and archaeologists, as well as art historians, scholars of economic history as well as numismatists. Numismatics is currently important in the research in our department in several studies, ranging from Hellenistic coinage on the island of Kos, to Roman imperial coinage and byzantine economy and gold solidi in Sweden. We therefore strongly support the efforts to establish a European numismatic network.
